

1. The Institutional Need & Researcher Credentials

In municipalities and regional special districts across Texas, elected officials serve in demanding, part-time capacities while full-time municipal staff and city attorneys report directly to the City Manager—not to individual council members. When 400-to-800-page agenda packets arrive late on a Friday afternoon for a Tuesday vote, members are expected to master complex municipal finance, land development code amendments, and multimillion-dollar utility contracts over a single weekend.

Institutional Pedigree & Constituent Defensibility: Principal Researcher Davis Jones brings an established national policy and strategy background across Accenture, Tesla, The World Bank, Pfizer, the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC), and the Office of U.S. Congressman Darrell Issa, with academic credentials from the University of Michigan, University of San Francisco, and Sonoma State University. His daily public policy and economic analysis reaches an audience of 645,000+ (500,000+ on Udemy, 100,000+ on TikTok, 20,000+ on LinkedIn, 20,000+ on Instagram, and 5,000+ on YouTube) and is followed by sitting U.S. Senators, Members of Congress, and national journalists.

Texas Open Meetings Act (TOMA)

Tex. Gov't Code Ch. 551 prohibits secret deliberations among a quorum of members.

Strictly individual 1-on-1 advisory research. Zero quorum coordination, zero "walking quorums", zero lobbying.

Municipal Council Stipend / Allowance Reimbursement

Reimbursable council expense allowances, district office budgets, or "use-it-or-lose-it" municipal contingency funds.

$297 flat à la carte stays well below municipal micro-purchase thresholds ($3,000). Itemized voucher formatted for City Secretary / Finance Clerk sign-off.

Campaign & Officeholder Funds (Form C/OH)

Tex. Elec. Code § 253.035 prohibits converting donor funds to personal cash, but explicitly permits officeholder legislative research.

100% lawful officeholder expenditure. Statement descriptor reads P DAVIS JONES LLC with formal Schedule F1 / G purpose description.
